I Think We're All Bozos On This Bus
Don't Crush That Dwarf, Hand Me the Pliers
How Can You Be Two Places at Once If You're Not Anywhere At All?

For those whose dorm rooms rang with the voices on those albums through the late '60s and early '70s, Firesign Theatre needs no introduction.

But for the uninitiated (and the younger): Meet Firesign Theatre, which isn't a theater at all. It's the four-man comedy troupe of Phil Austin, Phil Proctor, Peter Bergman and David Ossman (all of them born under astrological "fire signs"). They've been making theater of the mind for most of four decades, on radio, TV, film and in recordings.

The four joined forces in 1966 in Los Angeles, on the Radio Free Oz show that Bergman hosted at listener-supported station KPFK. And then, as one tongue-in-cheek troupe history puts it, they "rapidly evolved from doing put-ons and live original half-hour comic plays before ecstatic crowds into the multi-media production and performance entity we know today."

Over the years, they've produced two dozen best-selling records including the Grammy-nominated Three Faces of Al, Give Me Immortality or Give Me Death and The Bride of Firesign; seven nationally syndicated radio series; many local shows, musicals, and national tours; as well as short films Everything You Know Is Wrong, Eat or Be Eaten, and Nick Danger in the Case of the Missing Yolks. They were ranked among the "Thirty Greatest Comedy Acts of All Time" by Entertainment Weekly in 1997.
